"[106] According to Larson, tatvas enumeration in Samkhya is also found in Taittiriya Upanishad, Aitareya Upanishad and Yajnavalkya-Maitri dialogue at the Brihadaranyaka Upanishad.[107] The Katha Upanishad in verses 3.10-13 and 6.7-11 describes a concept of Bhau-108 philosophy and others [109] Katha Upanishad conceives Purusha (cosmic spirit, consciousness) just as the individual soul (Ayman, Yo).[108][110 Proto-Samkhya Ascetic origin While some former scholars have argued for Upanishadic originsThe Samkhya Tradition, [Note 4] and the Upanisads contain dualistic speculations that may have influenced Proto-Samkhya, [80] [111] Other scholars have noticed the differences of Shamkhya with the Vedic tradition. Moksha is described by Samkhya Scholars as a state of liberation, where Sattva Guna predominates. [15] Epistemology The Samkhya School considers perception, inference and reliable testimony as three reliable means for knowledge. [16] [17] Samkhya considered pratyakå1 £ a o dá1 ›Á1 a1am (perception of direct sense), anumä na (inference) and Åšabda or ä € ptavacana (verbal wisdom) the only valid shä [16] Unlike other schools, Samkhya did not consider the following three pramanas to be epistemically appropriate: upamä a1 ‡ a (comparation and analogy), arthä patti (postulation, derived from circumstances) or anupalabdi (no perception, negative/cognitive/cognitive). [17] pratyakå1 £ a (à¤a¤ ¥ à ° à ¥ˆà ¥à ·) means perception. This theistic philosophy of Samkhya is described in Mahabharata, the Puranas and the Bhagavad Gita. [150] Chandradhar Sharma in 1960 stated that Samkhya at the beginning was based on the absolute theist of Upanishads, but later, under the influence of Jaina and Buddhist thought, rejected theistic monism and was happy with spiritualist pluralism and atheic realism. Other important comments on the karika were Yuktidīpīka (c. Chapter 13 in this book contains a description of Samkhya philosophy. [139] The Sāminikhyapravacana Sūtra (c. It is also argued by commentators of this text that the existence of Ishvara cannot be proved and therefore cannot be admitted to exist. [147] A key difference between schoolsand yoga, state state is that yoga school accepts a deity 'personal, but essentially inactive,' or 'personal God'. [149] However, Radhanath Phukan, in the introduction to his translation of the Isvarakrsna Samkhya Karika, has argued that commentators who see non-conscientious as unconscious make the mistake of Samkhya as an atheist, although Samkhya is equally like the Yoga. [145] Most modern academics oppose that the concept of Ishvara was incorporated into the Samkhya viewpoint of Nirishvara (thea) only after being associated with yoga, pasupata and Bhagavata philosophy schools.
